Dear Wendy:

Here is the letter I promised you during our telephone conversation yesterday.

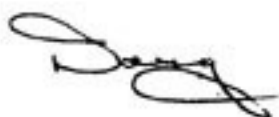

Between five and six years ago I started having a severe anal itching problem. I went through the entire managed health care system seeing general practitioners, dermatologists and a gastrointestinal doctor; complete with two or three proctoscopes. No problems were ever found. Many medications, prescription, over-the-counter and home remedies, suggested by the doctors, were tried over the years always with the same result being "worse than before".

After moving to Arizona, being here a few years, I decided (with the situation getting much worse) enough is enough. There must be something someone can do.

Our family doctor referred me to a George [redacted] M.D., in the gastroenterology department, Casa Blanca Clinic, in Mesa, AZ. On January 31, 1997 I had an appointment with Dr. [redacted]. After hearing my case history and doing a examination he gave me some samples of Calmoseptine. No more than twenty-four hours later my problem had cleared-up by at least seventy percent and the itching mostly gone. All done with your product and nothing else.

What can I say except thankyou very much. Keep up the good work and good fortune to you and your company.

Sincerely,

Douglas A. Dixon
